

Nik Kanakaris MD PhD, is an orthopaedic trauma surgeon, working as the Clinical Director of one of the top Major Trauma Centres in the UK. He works also as the Clinical Lead for Research and Innovation for Orthopaedic Trauma and an Honorary Senior Lecturer at the University of Leeds.

Born and studied in Athens Greece, got his specialist / fellowship training in Greece, USA and in the UK. Over the last 12 years he is working at the Leeds Teaching Hospitals, one of the largest Acute NHS Trust in the UK and University Hospitals in Europe.

His subspecialty interests are pelvic and acetabular reconstruction, polytrauma patient management, management of complications of orthopaedic trauma, orthobiologics and bone healing.

He has communicated extensively the results of his clinical and research work in more than 120 peer reviewed scientific publications that have received over than 2500 citations and has been the author of over than 80 chapters of scientific textbooks focusing on orthopaedic trauma and bone healing.

He enjoys family life, reading history, offshore sailing and playing basketball.